The state-of-the-art ships of the torpedo squadron, Light Cruiser Class "Agano".

They were originally planned to be constructed as torpedo ships.

Well, it would be without an arsenal, wouldn't it?

In "Tomarigi no Chiyufu", Agano serves as the secretary ship with Noshiro as her support. They are models 1 and 2 of the Agano class respectively.

but the style of warfare shifted to aerial battle.

The Agano class showed much strength in torpedo warfare, but were unable to exhibit much anti-aircraft ability.

Among them was Noshro, heralded as the strongest in the world, who was to succeed the fallen Jintsu.

The Agano Class was very hi-spec. For example, they each had an output of up to 100,000 horsepower, which is twice that of Light Cruiser Class destroyers.

The Agano class was thrown into the war with such great expectations,

But even through her great efforts at leading DesRon 2, Noshiro was destined to sink.

● Torpedo Light Cruisers
Japanese torpedo fleets employed the use of torpedos, mines, and the like and were composed around destroyers. These fleets had a flagship, and then destroyers at the head for mobility and night attacks. The Agano class would be a perfect fit as flagship for these destroyer fleets. Thus, the Agano class was planned out with strengthened communications stations and a smaller hull and with mobility in mind. As a result, they had twice as much power as the Tenryu Class ships and were just as fast as Kagero Class destroyers, thus becoming the strongest light cruisers.

However, at the time of the Agano Class's construction, the war became more focused on aerial battle, so torpedo cruisers did not play as active a role. Agano in particular did not see much combat when she became the flagship of the 10th Fleet, as she was limited mostly to transport duties. When Agano sank, Moshiro was nominated to lead. During this period, the ships of the Agano Class were called "The Princesses of the Sea", due to their beautiful styling. This class had certainly set the standard for light cruisers until the very end.
